Paintess Digestion. . "No man," says Sir stley Cooper, " ought to know by his sensalons that he has a stomach." In other words when digestion is perfect there is neither pain nor uneasiness in the region where it takes place. Nausca, want of appelite, flaticities, oppression after eating, shooting paim in the epigastrium, a flushing of the face at meal times, and a furred forgue in the morping, are among the direct symptoms of indirection. Constitution, biliousness, headaced, nearth of the private indirection of private and low spirits, are its almost invariable accompaniments. All these indications of private state, whether immediate or secondary, are usually aggressized by hot weather.

The close of summer is therefore the season when the victim of dyspepsia most argently needs a tonic and regulating medicine.
